

Marmaris'te O Gece: Mehmet Çetin

The Suspicious Death of a Presidential Bodyguard

İSMAIL GÜLMEZ

Mehmet Çetin, a presidential protection officer, was killed in Marmaris on the night of 15 July 2016. The court, for whatever reason, chose to hold the soldiers who arrived that night responsible without ever properly investigating the matter. Yet the evidence in the case file tells an entirely different story. This book draws back the curtain on the facts the court refused to examine.

- The blood is elsewhere Mehmet Çetin's blood — a near-certain DNA match — was found behind villa 1751, a spot no soldier set foot on that night and where no attack is recorded. Not at 1782.
- The autopsy contradicts its own record The autopsy's finding of a "gunshot wound to the left knee with a fragment from a soldier's rifle" is contradicted by the post-mortem examination photos and video. No entry wound is marked on the left knee.
- The only eyewitness gives a different hour The sole eyewitness, İrfan Paksoy, tied the killing to men in military dress who arrived by helicopter at 00:00–00:30. The convicted defendants reached Marmaris around 03:00. The court never heard Paksoy — or any bodyguard — in person.
